Told from the standpoint of a teenager who is a gifted child, made lonely by his extraordinary mental abilities, this is a coming-of-age story like no other. It is also a family saga set in Sicily where Tony goes searching for his family roots. He drifts into a palazzo with a strange name over the door, the Circle of Conversation, filled with people in disguise. But this is no costume ball. The Circle is a place out of Time, dark and humid, where the ghosts of his ancestors mill about and converse, waiting for Judgment Day among them, a beautiful woman with deep, black eyes that promise love. But the door slams shut behind him, Tony is trapped. His trip to Sicily, meant as a simple voyage of self-discovery, has turned into a nightmare. How can he shake off the past and find himself? Reviews: 1. from Sicilian literary critics when the book came out in Italian (published by E. Romeo): like dreaming with open eyes through Time - Diario di Siracusa emotional, but above all fantastic, surreal, meta-psychical, out of time and reality - Libert An authentic excursion in the past - La Sicilia 2. Selected reviews when it first came out in English (in an early version, Fear of the Past): a bit Alice in Wonderland, a bit Dantes Inferno, and a lot about coming of age and self-discovery (Author Joseph Badal) Good read not only for teenagers but also for grown ups looking for something different (Film maker Magda Olchawska) symbolic of universal emotions and human foibles, sometimes making them larger than life (Author Karen Rose Smith) This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
