Excerpt: .and I dared not ask to change my position until we reached shallow water at the mouth of the river. The Experienced One had looked at me askance when on starting I had mildly suggested he paddle me half way as I was a novice and only good in the bow. Oh, why had I not thought of padding my knees? How they ached! I re membered having read of Indian fakirs holding one position so long they harden into it, and I wondered if at our journey s end I would have to be lifted out of the canoe stiffened into this rev erential position for the rest of my natural days. I hoped the Experienced One would feel badly then, and this thought at times made me feel better. However, my knees throbbbed horribly; they felt like mumps, but we paddled on and on. At last as we neared the further side of the lake, its shores covered with charred skeleton trees and a second growth of timber. Dense masses of plants and lily pads almost hid the opening into a tiny stream, our goal, the Ox Tongue. Its waters were shallow; we rested and I joyfully stretched my numb legs. The sun beat down hot. The droning of insects, the note of a bird were the only sounds. The Experienced One began to hum an old Indian song learned in his boyhood from an Ojibwa and as he sang we paddled...
