The associates of the Society include a large majority of the whole School, whose attendance at meetings is purely voluntary. In the Summer Term four or five half-holidays are set aside for expeditions. These are conducted by the various sections into which the whole is subdivided--botanical, zoological, geological, entomological, photographic, architectural--whose labours are peripatetic, while the meteorological section is stationary and records the behaviour of barometer, thermometer, and rain-gauge in Rugby. Each section has a member of the School as its Secretary, and to each a Master belongs as well. The expeditions are mainly by bicycle, but sometimes go further afield; and it has been found by experience that the best flowers, birds, flints, moths, churches, and landscapes are nearly always in the neighbourhood of some inn where tea may be obtained when Research has induced weariness. To many who love not cricket, and to some who do, the N.H.S. expeditions are a welcome change and interest. Careful records are kept of observations in all the different branches, and are published in the annual Report of the Society, an interesting volume of increasing bulk, often containing articles by Rugbeians, past and present, about their own particular line of investigation. The N.H.S. Museum has been continually reduced to better and more scientific orderliness by the labours of Masters and Boys, who give their labours of love to the Society that owes an immense debt to the well-known antiquarian,...
