We, Empire State children, are lovers of thee. By thy flowing waters our fortunes are made. Flow on, noble Hudson, refuse not thy aid. Thy birth s in the mountains that tower toward the north, A rivulet nameless thou first gushest forth; But soon fed to fullness by torrent and stream Thy bosom bears ships moved by breeze or by steam. Through numberless ages thy waters rolled on; Gave drink to the bison, elk, bear, and wild swan; Bore up the fierce Mohawk in birch bark canoe, While squaws tilled the fields where the maize tassels grew. The brave smoked his pipe, or shot darts at the deer, Or went on the warpath when danger was near, Bore scalps in his belt, yet he gave honor due To heaven s great spirit, the good Manitou. Tis three hundred years since that September day When Hudson s Half-Moon shed her light in the bay, Saw Manhattan Island, Storm King, and Crow s Nest, Saw forests unending roll on to the west. No trace of a house save a wigwam or two Where groups of wild red men appeared to the view, Amazed at the ship with its sails flapping white As though a great eagle had burst into sight.
